Halacha of the Week

If a person touches liquid with hands that are tamei, the liquid will become tamei and will be able to transmit tumah to a food. Therefore, many Rishonim rule that a person must wash his hands before eating any wet food. In their opinion, the brocha of Al Netilas Yadayim must be said. A minority view holds that there is no obligation. Shulchan Aruch rules according to the majority, but a brocha is not recited in deference to the minority opinion. This halacha only applies if the food is wet with one of the sheva mashkin/ "seven liquids" (i.e. wine, [bee] honey, olive oil, milk [or melted butter], dew, blood and water). If one of these liquids hardens, it is no longer considered a liquid and there is no obligation to wash one's hands.
